

Power-up instruction and learning in remote and hybrid settings!

Education leaders are often challenged with making sure their district and schools have the capacity, skills, and knowledge to ensure all students learn at high levels and improve achievement. As educators, and district and school leaders ourselves, we recognize that all organizations need to update and refine our skill sets to be ready for any "shift" in leading, teaching, and learning. To support your readiness, we are offering a five-part series on:

Key considerations and strategies for High-Quality, Student-Centered Remote Learning

focused on:

Multilingual Learners (MLL) / English Language Learners (ELL)

Be ready for any "shift" in teaching and learning.
High impact, on target professional learning!

Multilingual Learners and English Language Learners are vulnerable groups in need of critical support. During a typical school year, this group of students are connected to numerous providers in helping them meet their individualized plans and goals.

As a result of the response to the COVID-19 pandemic, schools will continue to operate under unique circumstances. There are challenges and considerations in how to meet mandated services and instruction when teaching and learning through a virtual and onsite format.

These are "how-to" sessions! We will explore and identify critical considerations as well as viable solutions in assisting district staff in propelling the learning of MLLs & ELLs in remote and hybrid settings.
